What is Tae Kwon Do?

Tae Kwon Do is an ancient martial art, which originated over 2000 years ago, in what is now known as Korea. Literally translated, Tae Kwon Do is “the art of kicking and punching”. Physical fitness, self-confidence, self control, discipline, and self-defense are the main subjects covered in our style of training. Exercises, including strengthening, aerobics, and stretching; kicking and punching drills and poomse (a.k.a. patterns or forms) are utilized. Tae Kwon Do is more than exercise and techniques for self-defense. The study of Tae Kwon Do is a means to an end, which is to install in people self-confidence, strong values and good habits. Tae Kwon Do teaches students to develop positive mental attitudes, motivate themselves and make responsible choices. The martial arts student has to be responsible for their actions and respect others. Tae Kwon Do is not a cult, magic or a religion. It is not about learning to beat people up, as some movies and television have depicted. It is simply a sensible method of constant training taught year round as a lifetime system of exercise.
